Home SunglassesTypes Types of Sunglasses From Retro Hipster to Sporty Chic, the latest men's sunglasses offer endless opportunities for a guy to block the sun and express himself at the same time. Whether you're dressed for work or playing, a good pair of shades can be the ultimate last. If there's a major theme running through men's sunglasses, it's nostalgia. From the classic World War II aviator to the brazen 70s, designers find endless ways to turn cool from the 20th century. DO YOU KNOW WHAT YOU WANT? Find an optical store near you and start shopping.1. Colorful sunglasses-lens tonesColor becomes more and more playful in men's sunglasses, especially in sports tones. If you have fun in the sun, you can throw caution in the wind and go for vibrant shades. These tints eventually serve a function. Dark turquoise enhances contrast in intense light without distortion, and yellow lenses optimize object definition. Both are popular with pilots, boaters, hunters and skiers. But you also need shades that can withstand wind, sand and salt water while creating crystal clear clarity. Prepare to pay a little more for prescription sunglasses with A-1 durability and appearance. Maui Jim recently added vibrant blue and green lenses to her polarized rectangular sunglasses, which convinced even long-term wearers to pick up a new pair. Costa's salt-water-friendly Wingman planes appeal to sailors and fishermen. You can even order bifocals in copper, emerald green or sapphire blue lenses. In particular, Costa's 580 lenses are known for clarity, durability on water and shore, and resistance to fog.2. Classic aviatorThe aviator is again great in every imaginable shape, color and material. Originally designed to replace World War II aviators, the original aviator had lighter polarized lenses and a double or triple bridge known as Bullet Hole. You can go fully on retro fighter pilot with a classic aviator, such as Good Vibrations with the familiar smoky drop lens in silver wire frame.3. Funky AviatorOr you can tap on the funky variations on the Aviator theme. Enzo and Miami Vice add this top bar to their retro round of hipster tones to add some machoness to hipster nerdness. Giorgio Armani offers a Lux version of this look, with a floating inner edge of contrasting metal and the option of yellow lenses. For a more angular geometry, the Sun Eight has the flat lens and top bar of vintage aviators, but with a box-free hexagonal shape that will make you stand out. So did Prada's elongated Cat-eye tones, an aviator spotted on the pioneering Colombian reggaeton musician J. Balvin.4. Sporty horizontal wraparoundA look made famous by Peter Fonda, the Harley driver of the 1969 indie classic Easy Rider, the face-shrouded curve of elongated oval lenses is still the perfect shade for open road cruises. For full-on vintage cool, try the Ray-Ban Olympian with signature gold wire frame and and top bar. Or go with darker frames that only angel on your inner hell. If you go for a polished surface, the Ray-Ban Predator will give you the glowing panic of men in black, perfect for fighting aliens without folding your perfectly tailored suit. 5. Clip-onsShould magnetic clip-ons even be called clip-ons? The best clip-ons are perfectly integrated into the eyeglass frame. Unlike the chunky versions that literally pop up on the reader, magnetic clip-ons offer a sleek way to turn prescription glasses into sun blockers. Takumi makes a streamlined rectangular version with magnetic clip-on lenses specifically designed to accommodate the accents in the funky arms. Once turned into sunglasses, no one will ever know that they are prescription-only.6. Retro round sunglassesNo doubt, men's tones are trending and smaller, not a look that any guy can pull off. One way to set the style that rounds you off is to ask yourself: In what era do you want to be born? If it's mid-century Greenwich Village, look for the style favoured by Elijah Wood and Ryan Gosling. Both guys are masters of coffeehouse hipster street style. Honey-gold frames with contrasting green or smoky blue-grey lenses draw attention to the roundness of the lens. Persol has them in turtle with green or slate blue lenses. Giorgio Armani has a funky retro round with yellow or brown lenses in brushed metal frames with a contrasting color.7. 70s round lensesIf you look more like relaxed, slightly eccentric British rockers, circa 1970s, you can prefer the small round wire frames that made John Lennon famous. If you don't need a magnification to read, the Grasp is almost a perfect replica of this. 8. Wraparound single lens sunglassesIf U2 is more your style, the circumnavigation single lens Bono has been preferred since the 90s again. Burberry has an elegant version of this rectangular shield with smoky lens in streamlined, semi-rimless frames in black or white. Dolce & Gabbana has a version without rim and wide arms. 9. Pilot tonesPilot tones like the colorful Zendaya for Tommy Hilfiger are hot again. Dolce & Gabbana gives the pilot a geometric edge with the well-known drop lenses in black frames with bright orange details. If you want to work out the Terminator completely, choose the latest version of the Gargoyles that Arnold Schwarzenegger wore in this movie. The shifter comes with a clip-on version of this uni lens, so you can go from clear to smoky in the same metallic frame.10. Mirror CoatingsMirrored make a comeback and not just for guys who want to hide from the paparazzi. Dolce & Gabbana are among the designers offering the possibility of mirror coatings. Mirror coatings deflect light and stop the scattering of UV rays in the lens. Make sure they are scratch-resistant as cheap coatings don't last long. Some opticians become creative, at customer's request, add mirror coatings mirror coatings different intensities and colours. In addition to an additional protective layer against glare, mirror coatings – from lavender to rose gold to black – add some funk to otherwise ordinary shades. It's up to you.
